INTRODUCTION

Cory:

Hello and welcome to the Fireside Chat. We're so happy you're here.

Jay:

So here's what you can expect. We're going to talk about The Connection Experience and walk you through the 10 key questions we get asked all the time. To guide us, we'll use a little agenda slide.

Cory:

We'll start with a brief version of our story so you can understand where we're coming from. Then we'll talk about who this Fireside Chat is really for — and spend some time there, because it's an important distinction. We want to help you identify if this experience is the right fit for you.

Jay:

We'll also be sharing stories from couples we've worked with, because sometimes the moment of "Maybe we should try something like this" comes a little late. We want to help you recognize that moment before it passes.

Jay:

Let's give you some background on us. We're high school sweethearts — been together almost 40 years now. We have two boys, Wyatt and Jaxson — they're 14 and 19 now.

Cory:

We've been together a long time. And right before our 25th wedding anniversary, we hit a major low point. We weren't sure we were going to make it.

Jay:

It wasn't that anything terrible happened — there was no abuse, no betrayal. It was just… we were coping. Running businesses, raising kids, caregiving for our parents — we were burnt out and stuck. Living parallel lives. We loved each other but had become disconnected.

Cory:

And we started to justify it — like, "This is just how it is after you have kids." But deep down, it didn't feel right. We still loved each other, and we were curious why it wasn't working even with that love.

Jay:

That moment came for me during a psychedelic journey I took with a friend and guide. In that experience, I saw a brick wall between Cory and me. Each brick represented a little justification — reasons why things were "okay" even when they weren't. And it hit me: this wall had to come down, or we were done.

Cory:

When he came home and told me about it, I was furious at first. We had always said we wouldn't go near psychedelics — we were a hard no for years. And then he went and did it without me.

Jay:

That conversation was what we now call "The Talk." I told her I was done settling. I was going to lose weight, grow my hair, fix my teeth, and move forward with or without her. And to my surprise, she stayed.

Cory:

That conversation happened on 03/03/2020. Ten days later, the world shut down. For us, it was divine timing. We suddenly had time to focus on each other — on healing. We reinvented our relationship from the ground up. We lost 60 pounds between us, healed trauma, rebooted our sex life, and finally started creating instead of coping.

Jay:

That healing inspired others to ask us for help — friends, clients, total strangers. We weren't looking to start a business, but eventually, we got certified as Psychedelic Guides and created what we now call The Connection Experience.

Cory:

It was our accidental business. But when we started sharing our story, we realized how many couples were living exactly like we had been — just coasting. It broke our hearts.

Jay:

We've since developed 14 different protocols and spoken on stages alongside people like Rick Doblin of MAPS. And the whole point of our work is simple: when two people each do their own work and bring their whole selves to the relationship, the experience is unmatched.

Cory:

It's the most loving and loved we've ever felt. We're proud of that — even if it took us 30 years to get here. If you've ever felt unloved, unseen, unworthy, or disconnected — and you're willing to do the work — this is for you.

Jay:

And we know one partner often leads the way. The other might be hesitant — that was Cory in our case. But you're here for a reason. If you're even curious, that's a sign.

Cory:

We used to joke about how I was the "wall of no's." Jay would come up with ideas, and I'd immediately resist. It was always "No." But eventually, I realized how much that was holding us back.

Jay:

She had this moment where she said, "I've been a big fat no." And we laughed — but it was real. That realization changed everything.

Cory:

Since then, I've been choosing to be a "sea of yeses." It's been transformational.

Jay:

So with all that context in mind — let's dive into the top 10 questions couples ask us.

QUESTION 10: WHO ARE PSYCHEDELICS FOR AND WHO DO WE SERVE?

Jay:

This might be the last question on the list, but it's one of the most important. We're going to spend the most time on this one because we really want you to understand the full scope of possibility here. Honestly, we didn't initially see the potential either. We couldn't. We were too caught up in fear, in the old stories, in the conditioning. We didn't have the right structure or support to say yes to it.

I mean, even I was terrified. Psychedelics didn't fit into the life we were building. We grew up with "Just say no," with the war on drugs, the fried egg commercials—"this is your brain on drugs"—and we were the ones warning our kids never to touch any of it. That stuff sticks. It was ingrained. But I want to invite you, if you still have some of that propaganda lingering in your heart or mind, as you read further—set it aside. Just ask yourself: what if?

So, who are psychedelics for, and who do we serve?

Cory:

We've noticed three primary groups of couples we serve. The first is couples who've been together for 7 to 15 years. They usually have kids, maybe aging parents, and they're in a stage where they're mostly just coping. We've talked about this before as "parallel lives."

Jay:

Exactly. You hear phrases like "we divide and conquer"—you take the young one to hockey, I'll do the shopping; I'll take the old one to school, you do the yard work. It sounds productive on the surface, but what it becomes is two people handling logistics instead of sharing love and connection. You're partners in mechanics, not in intimacy.

Cory:

We were together 10 years before we had kids. And the shift after having them was huge. For many couples, the focus becomes the kids, and the relationship takes a backseat. Over time, that dynamic causes real disconnect.

Jay:

The second group we serve is people in second marriages or relationships—or those who are just progressive thinkers. They're not necessarily broken, but they know what didn't work before and want to consciously create something better this time.

Cory:

Exactly. And then there's the third group: couples who are facing real issues. They still love each other, but they're on the edge. It's like, "We either solve this or we're done." Depending on where they're at, we may guide them through The Connection Experience, or through something gentler like The Couple's Journey, which gives more individual space before diving into the partnership work.

Jay:

Let's go deeper. Because "parallel lives" is just the chapter title. Underneath that are all the feelings, the disconnect, the small moments that add up to distance.

Here's a simple example: Have you ever been lying in bed and wanted to initiate sex, but didn't? Maybe you were afraid of rejection, or maybe you were resentful, or just assumed your partner was too tired. Whatever the reason—you withheld.

Cory:

And I'd feel the shift too. Jay would be snarky and grumpy—not just with me, but with the kids. I'd get defensive, but I wouldn't say anything. We weren't really talking about what was going on. It was just building—resentment, distance. The wall.

Jay:

We've had couples who came in thinking things were fine, only to realize how bad things really were once they slowed down and looked. It's like the frog in boiling water analogy. You adjust to the discomfort.

Cory:

We had couples say, "Once the kids go to university, I'm just going to move out." They weren't planning a dramatic divorce. Just… slowly slipping away. That's heartbreaking.

Jay:

One woman said they were “slowly coasting toward our inevitable end.” Friends—if that’s you, do something. Because that’s a terrible way to live.

Cory:

We also have clients who are empty nesters—now that the kids are gone, they’re staring at each other thinking, “Now what?” And we’ve had couples come in before hitting the hard parts. Newlyweds looking to build strong foundations. Adventurous couples who want to create something incredible, before there’s damage.

Jay:

And some of those couples continue on with us in what we call The Ritual—an ongoing commitment to regularly return to this work. One couple who started with us said their relationship was in jeopardy. They weren’t having sex. They ran a business together and were disconnected on all fronts. Now, two years into The Ritual, their relationship is thriving. Their business exploded. Their sex life did too. But it didn’t happen overnight. It took work. It took clearing. For us, that phase took about six months.

Cory:

Another couple—29 years together—said they experienced an “intimacy miracle.” That’s not uncommon. And it’s not just about sex. It’s about clearing out the old stuff so that connection can actually happen.

Jay:

One last story. A couple from the States—29 years together, kids gone, traditional therapy for ten years. After one night in The Connection Experience, they said, “We solved more in one night than we did in ten years of therapy.”

Cory:

That’s the power of this work. That’s who it’s for.

QUESTION 9: WHAT IS THE EXPERIENCE LIKE? AND WILL I LOSE CONTROL?

Cory:

Honestly, this was one of my biggest concerns going into the work. I didn't grow up using any type of drugs. We tried mushrooms a few times earlier in our relationship, but that's about it. Jay had more experience than I did. So when we started exploring this seriously, I was really nervous. I kept wondering: What's it going to feel like? Will I lose control?

And losing control isn't fun for me. That's actually one of the things I don't love about alcohol—just that sensation of being disconnected or off-balance. So when people ask what the experience is like, and whether they'll feel out of control, I completely understand where they're coming from.

With the specific medicines we use—ones from the empathogen and entactogen family—my personal experience has been the complete opposite of losing control. These medicines are carefully chosen for connection. And when I took them for the first time, and every time since, I've felt more connected to my higher self, more grounded, more present—more me—than I ever thought possible.

It's actually kind of funny... sometimes I feel more myself on the medicine than I do in my regular day-to-day state. These experiences bring me home—into my body, into presence, into truth. And when I feel that in myself, and I witness Jay's higher self at the same time... it's extraordinary.

Jay:

It's beautiful. You're seeing and feeling not just your own essence, but the heart and soul of your partner.

Cory:

Yes. These medicines open the heart. The amygdala—the fear center in the brain—gets quieted down. Sometimes it just completely steps aside, which allows you to have conversations that might have felt impossible before. You can talk about the stuff you've been avoiding, share things with honesty and ease that normally feel hard to say. You're happy, you're loved, you're present. It's honestly... lovely.

Jay:

The communication is lifted. It's held by compassion and presence. That voice in your head—the one that says, "Don't say that, it'll start a fight"—it softens. You're able to speak from your heart instead of your fear. So your conversations go from surface level to real, with your heart open and your defenses down.

And just to contextualize this... you've probably already read a bit about psychedelics. You've maybe followed the research around MDMA and PTSD, or the larger psychedelic renaissance. Those studies are usually about individual journeys, guided by a therapist with a clinical process—and they're powerful.

But here's what's different:

When your true self is seen and held by the person you love most... it creates a level of healing that nothing else can replicate.

Cory:

Nothing. Not a therapist. Not a clinical program. Not another psychedelic ceremony. When I see Jay—his heart, his pain, his joy—and when he sees me in that same way, there's this undeniable transformation.

Jay:

And we hold each other in a space of love, presence, and healing. That kind of experience? It changes you. It changes your relationship. It changes how you parent. How you show up in your family. How you face your everyday life. The ripple effect is massive.

Cory:

So, short version?

Jay:

You will not lose control.

Cory:

You actually become more of yourself.

QUESTION 8: I HAVE DONE PSYCHEDELICS BEFORE. IS THIS DIFFERENT AND HOW?

Cory:

So this one comes up a lot. People say, “I’ve done psychedelics before. Is this really different?” And the short answer is: Yes. It’s very different.

Jay:

We hear it all the time. Clients come in with a range of psychedelic experiences and then say, “Wait a second… I’ve used this medicine before, but all I did was sit on a porch and watch the sunset,” or “We danced all night at a party, but we didn’t really connect.” Or sometimes they say, “I had a bad mushroom trip in college, and I swore I’d never do that again.”

But what we do here is entirely different — not just because of the substances we use, but because of the structure, intention, and support we bring to the experience.

Cory:

So let’s start by breaking down the types of psychedelics. And I know you have some strong thoughts on this…

Jay:

Yes! Here’s my soapbox moment: the term “psychedelics” is actually terrible, because it lumps together substances that are completely different from each other. So, let’s look at the three general categories.

Category One: The Classics

These are what most people think of when they hear the word “psychedelics”: LSD, mushrooms, peyote, mescaline, ayahuasca, etc. These are nonspecific amplifiers — meaning they amplify whatever is going on for you. If you’re joyful, it could be amazing. If you’re stressed or grieving, that gets magnified too. They can be powerful tools, but they’re also unpredictable.

Cory:

And that unpredictability is why we don’t use the classics in The Connection Experience. If someone’s had a rough week or is processing something heavy, it can come out sideways. And most of the time, when people talk about “bad trips,” it’s related to classic psychedelics taken with no clear intention or support.

Jay:

Exactly. With classics, set and setting are everything — and most people never had either of those things in place when they tried them.

Category Two: Empathogens & Entactogens

This is the family of medicines we do use. These substances are heart-opening and generally work by increasing serotonin, dopamine, and norepinephrine. They help quiet the fear center of the brain (the amygdala), making it easier to access emotions, express love, and experience connection. They're gentle, reliable, and safe when used correctly.

Cory:

Just to be clear — that doesn't mean they're always happy-go-lucky. Heart-opening means whatever's on your heart comes forward. So you may feel joy, or you may feel sadness, or grief, or release. But even those more emotional moments are still held in a deeply beautiful and loving space.

Jay:

Category Three: Dissociatives

These include ketamine, nitrous oxide, Salvia Divinorum, and 5-MeO-DMT depending on the dose. These create more of an out-of-body experience and are very different from what we do.

Cory:

So to be super clear — in our process, we only work with empathogens and entactogens. And the biggest difference isn't just the medicine — it's the structure around it.

Jay:

Here's what's different about The Connection Experience:

- A 5-day lead-up where you set intentions and prepare mentally, emotionally, and spiritually.
- A guided evening with our support, prompts, and structure — so you're not just hoping for the best.
- A safe container with built-in connection cues, rituals, and processes designed to deepen your bond.
- Follow-up integration support to help you understand what happened and how to bring it into daily life.
- A coaching session afterward that answers the question, "How do we keep this going?"

Cory:

You're not just handed medicine and left to figure it out. You're held — fully. And that changes everything. I honestly would've felt really nervous doing this on my own. But knowing someone was there in case anything felt off made all the difference.

Jay:

And we hear it again and again. Couples come in — even those with deep psychedelic experience — and leave saying, "I had no idea this was even possible." On average, I'd say 20% of our clients have had significant psychedelic experience, and almost every one of them walks away saying, "This was something else entirely."

Cory:

Because it's done intentionally, with support, in partnership. That's what makes it magic.

QUESTION 6,7: WHAT IS THE MEDICINE YOU USE? AND HOW DO I KNOW IT'S SAFE?

Cory:

What exactly is the medicine we use?

In The Connection Experience, and also with our couples who continue with us through The Ritual, we primarily work with two medicines, both in the Empathogen/Entactogen category. While there may be some variations or additions for returning couples, this is the combination we start with and continually come back to. It's our favorite.

The first is called our Attunement medicine — It works beautifully at the beginning of the evening. It helps you really tune in and have the kinds of deep, grounded conversations that build connection. This unique & rare medicine used accomplishes three things:

1. An EGO evaporator...Poof!
2. A Cognitive Enhancer - You will think faster and you will make connections of ideas in your own brain more powerfully and directly so the conversation is clear, and you will remember it.
3. A Connection Creator - A container of support and love for eachother is a natural outcome and this happens with such ease.

Then we move into the second empathogen, which brings that same sense of connection deeper into the body. It's a progression from emotional and conversational openness into embodied presence and intimacy.

Jay:

Our medicine comes from what we believe is the safest supply available in Canada — a trusted lab that serves both licensed therapists and underground practitioners across the country.

And we are, frankly, tight asses about your safety. Even though the lab we work with is top-notch, we don't take anything for granted. Every batch goes through three layers of testing:

1. We test for fentanyl.
2. We test for purity.
3. And yes — we test it ourselves before ever sharing it with a client.

It's part of the job. Not a bad one, either.

Cory:

(laughs) Yeah, it's a weird part of the job, but it's essential. We want people to feel totally safe in this process. And that's also why we caution people who are sourcing their own medicine for personal use — be very careful.

Jay:

If you're going to do it yourself, get a testing kit, check for purity, and understand what you're taking. We've heard stories — some people got lucky, others had some very sketchy experiences. Please, don't take unnecessary risks.

Cory:

Whether you work with us or not, we want you to be safe. That's the bottom line.

QUESTION 5: ARE THERE HEALTH CONCERNS?

Cory:

So, question number five is a big one: Are there health concerns?

And the honest answer is yes — there can be.

One of the things we're very mindful about is the medications people are taking. Some medications, especially those that affect serotonin levels, can interfere with how the medicine works—or make it unsafe altogether. So we always ask detailed questions around this.

We also look at heart health, high blood pressure, and other medical conditions. We have an intake process that covers all of that.

If there's anything we're unsure about, we refer our clients to someone we absolutely trust—a pharmacist who is deeply familiar with psychedelics. She used to work as a traditional pharmacist, but she's now integrated that with her knowledge of these medicines. She reviews medications and health concerns on a case-by-case basis and gives both the client and us a clear picture of whether it's safe to proceed.

Sometimes, her guidance might lead to us adjusting the medicine we use. Other times, it's just a hard no. And that's okay. Health and safety come first—always.

Jay:

As enthusiastic as we are about this process, and as powerful and transformational as it's been for us and hundreds of couples we've worked with—we're very clear that this isn't for everyone.

Cory:

Exactly. And there are different kinds of health concerns we look for—not just physical, but also mental and emotional well-being. That's why we have a full intake form, a screening interview, and a process to really ensure this is the right fit.

Jay:

If it's not a good fit, we'll be upfront. We'll refer you elsewhere or suggest alternatives. We've said no before—and we'll do it again if it means protecting someone's well-being.

Cory:

And just to add to the medication part: in some cases, it's possible to safely taper off certain meds before the experience and then return to them afterward. But that's something we only explore with professional guidance. There are lots of options in some cases—but for others, it's simply not a safe choice, and we honor that.

Jay:

Bottom line: your health is non-negotiable. If this is for you, we'll make sure it's safe. If it's not, that's perfectly okay too.

QUESTION 4: HOW PRIVATE IS THE EXPERIENCE, AND AM I GOING TO SHARE THE EXPERIENCE WITH OTHER COUPLES?

Jay:

First and foremost, this is a very private experience. So let's walk through how it works.

When you reach out, we'll start with a private call to ensure the experience is right for you—health-wise, energetically, and relationally. If we all feel it's a fit, you choose a date from our Schedule for your Connection Experience.

There is some preparation through private texting assignments. These are designed to help you and your partner start setting intentions and tuning in before the ceremony even begins.

Cory:

On the day of The Connection Experience, we gather for an intention-setting session. That part usually includes three to five other couples and lasts about 45 minutes to an hour. It's light, supportive, and focused on helping everyone ground into their experience.

You will receive the first medicine dose—together with the group, but in a safe, neutral setting.

Jay:

After that first dose, you leave the shared space and head back to your own private hotel room. From that point forward, the experience is entirely between you and your partner.

We'll do a quick "in person" check-in with you before the second dose, just to make sure you're safe, grounded, and in a good space emotionally, mentally, and spiritually. After that, you're fully in your own experience—with us as your safety net, but with full privacy.

Cory:

You'll have all the structure, prompts, and support you need, but the night itself is just for the two of you. And if it's your first Connection Experience, we'll have a check-in the next morning to hear how it went and make sure you're feeling supported.

QUESTION 3: WHAT ABOUT SEX? PERFORMANCE, ORGASMS?

Jay:

Alright, let's talk about it—sex. Performance, orgasms, what actually happens in The Connection Experience?

Let's begin with the phases we've observed in most couples. I touched on this earlier, but it's worth diving deeper. In the early stages of this work, couples usually spend more time in conversation and emotional intimacy. Yes, there might be sensual or sexual connection, but it's typically not the "wild sex" people imagine when they hear the word "psychedelics."

Why? Because most couples come into the experience with friction between them—old stories, patterns, disconnection. And the early work is about clearing that friction.

Cory:

We sometimes describe it like a giant whiteboard that's been scribbled all over. Thoughts, emotions, baggage—it's all there, crowding the space. The Connection Experience helps clear that whiteboard. And once there's space, there's room for pleasure, sensuality, and eventually, deeper sexual expression.

Jay:

So what tends to happen is: the more you clear, the more room there is for play, for exploration, and for authentic intimacy. One of the most beautiful parts of our own journey happened after about six months of doing this work together. Our sex life completely transformed—beyond anything we could have imagined.

And not just in frequency or intensity, but in how we showed up.

Cory:

That's why attunement is the first part of the evening. We use a special medicine for that, to create that space. Because when I feel seen, heard, safe, and emotionally open —I want to connect more deeply.

Jay:

I say this to the guys all the time: if you don't take attunement seriously, you're missing out. It's the secret sauce.

Cory:

And it's not complicated. Women (and feminine energy in general) thrive in emotional connection. We need to feel seen, understood, valued—and when that happens, intimacy becomes expansive. It's not a chore or goal; it becomes a playground.

Jay:

Over time, this rewires your relationship. You find yourselves wanting to do life together in new ways—working out, spending more time together, even just hanging out and being close.

Cory:

It stops feeling like "work" and starts feeling like something you just naturally want more of.

Jay:

Now—two quick points about performance.

One: some men may experience what I jokingly call "soft equipment." The medicine can occasionally make erections a little less reliable. Not always, but it's worth being aware of. Sometimes a bit of support helps, and that's totally okay.

Two: it can also act as an orgasm suppressant for both men and women.

Cory:

And ironically? That might be the best thing ever. Because you stop trying to “get somewhere” and start enjoying the experience of pleasure itself.

Jay:

Exactly. We started making love for the feeling, not the finish. We’d spend hours—five, six, even seven—just enjoying each other. And sometimes, no orgasm happened. But it was still the best sex of our lives.

Cory:

Also, don't let the hours scare you—it feels like 15 minutes. Time becomes fluid. It’s like a time warp of intimacy.

QUESTION 2: IS THIS A ONE AND DONE?

Cory:

Nope. We hope not!

Jay:

You can have a powerful, life-shifting experience from doing this once. That's absolutely true. But if you're looking for long-term transformation, integration, and actual rewiring of your patterns and relationships, it's not going to be a one-and-done journey.

Cory:

Around 90% of the couples who come and do this with us choose to continue with something we call The Ritual. That's a bundle of four experiences, plus two at-home kits, that help you integrate this work into your life and relationship.

Jay:

And here's why:

Like we said earlier, the first few sessions are usually about clearing—working through the stuff that's built up between you. Once that's cleared, the exploration begins. The rewiring begins. And that part takes time.

The couples who go through The Ritual—especially those who repeat it—often tell us that it's after the rewiring starts that they really begin to see that lift in every part of their life.

Cory:

We think of this as a reinvention process. That's what it was for us. We are not the same people who started this journey in 2020. Not even close.

Jay:

Exactly. One of our couples, Curtis and Holly, said something so powerful. She said, "I love him so much more now—and I didn't even know that was possible."

That was our experience, too. Our whole scale of measurement changed. What we used to think was the best-case scenario? That became just the starting point.

Cory:

Like, you might come in thinking, "If we could just double how often we make love, that would be amazing." And then you get to a point where you'd never want to go back to that old metric—even if someone offered you a million dollars.

Jay:

So yes, come try it once if you're curious. But let's be real—you don't shower once and call yourself clean forever. You don't go to the gym once and expect lasting results. You don't do one therapy session or eat one healthy meal and think you've arrived.

Cory:

This work is no different. It's about building emotional and relational muscles, and practicing new ways of being together.

Jay:

Exactly. And that takes time, consistency, and commitment. But it's so worth it.

QUESTION 1: CAN WE TEST TO SEE ITS EFFECTS ON OUR HEART, MIND, AND SOUL?

Cory:

Yes. You sure can.

Jay:

There are several ways we can support you in safely exploring this work. When we started this two years ago, we had one path. But over time—and thanks to feedback and requests from our community—we've created multiple protocols to meet people wherever they are.

Cory:

One of the most accessible ways to try this out is through something we created called The TEASE.

Jay:

TEASE stands for Threshold Experience of Attunement & Surrender with Ease. It's a low-dose empathogen experience that you do privately at home, and it comes with a full digital program. You'll be guided through exercises and conversations designed to help you:

- Understand how this medicine feels in your body
- Experience communication with your partner with your fear center dialed down
- Explore touch and presence in a gentle, guided way

Cory:

It's not a full Connection Experience, and it doesn't include the Attunement medicine—but it gives you a real taste of what this path can feel like.

Jay:

It's like dipping your toe in the water. If you've ever thought, "What if I'm the one person who reacts badly?" — The TEASE lets you test it safely, with structure and guidance.

Cory:

And it's simple, easy, and relatively inexpensive.

Jay:

Another great entry point is our Couples Microdosing Protocol. It's completely unique—there's nothing else like it out there designed specifically for couples. It's either a four-week program when used between Connection Experiences or a six-week standalone cycle.

We guide you through:

- What to take, how to take it
- How to track and evaluate your progress
- How to build it into your relationship intentionally

Cory:

It's a great starting point—especially if you're feeling a bit nervous about diving into a full experience. And then, of course, there's the full Connection Experience.

Jay:

That's where the real magic happens. We host them every six weeks in Calgary, and now every quarter in the United States. If you're ready for deep transformation, that's the place to be.
To get started, just click the button below and book a time to talk with us. We'll help match you to the offer that's right for you—and if it's not the right fit, we'll still do our best to support you.

Cory:

There's zero pressure. This is your decision. You and your partner have to feel aligned and ready—and when you are, we're here.

Jay:

Below this text, you'll also find links to our FAQ page, where we answer additional questions and provide resources, books, and science to explore further. You'll also find our About Us page, where you can read more about our background and why this work is so unique.

Cory:

We've been working with couples for years—long before psychedelics were part of it. Weekend retreats, workshops, private coaching. But adding the medicine has brought a whole new level of connection and transformation.

Jay:

So if you're feeling that tug...
If you're living in parallel lives,
If you're justifying the disconnection,
If you wish you felt more loved—or could express more love—
If you want to raise the energy in your home, your bedroom, or your life...

Cory:

Then take a moment and just tell the truth—about where you're at, what you want, what you need, and what your partner might need too. And then consider stepping into this with intention. Because it really can transform everything.

Jay:

We hope to see you in a Connection Experience soon.

Cory:

We really do.

Both:

Thanks for watching.
